BY RABBI SAMUEL MARKS. In memoriam of Abbie Gifford-Epsen, died, in Leavenworth, Kansas, February,

23, 1897, aged 48 years. One by one the roses fall, one by one the years go by, and one by one, we, too, pass away. And all, saye the recollection of our career and the affections bestowed by our level ones, is interred

Standing, as I do, at this bier, my friends, I feel the burden of the hour. I am charged with the message of griefstricken hearts to become the interpreter of your thoughts, to voice the feelings and sentiments of woe and anguish which the loss of a very dear one has occasioned. I know how yam it is to gild a grief with words; the words of another mean so little when the lips of those we love are white and still, that speech then seems to me almost mockery, yea, aimost profane, with futile human words, to break the solemn stillness that envelops the placid sleeper in death. Yet the voice of sympathy with your loss, the duty of friendship for you, and of respect for the departed bid me speak.

DEATH'S PROBLEM. Death is the deepest problem of life! When with its icy breath it touches one of our beloved, it brings perce to the sufferer, but sorrow to the hearts of the surviving. Thus, Abbie Gifford-Epsen a good and brave woman, a devoted consort, a faithful companion, in the prime of her life, in the zenith of her womanhood, at the age of forty-eight years, has reached her journey's end, cutting in twain the tender tie that for six years so lovingly and tenderly entwined the good wife with her beloved husband. The vigorous spirit which animated a noble frame, which caused the eyes to beam with the inspiration of thought and endowed every movement with grace and loveliness-this spirit has flown from its temporal abode. And only the ruins of the temple, her soul inhabited, has re-

And we are met with feelings of profound sorrow to give expression to our appreciation of her life and worth and our recognition of the great loss, the happy circle in which she moved, has sustained in lier demise.

RESPECTED BY ALL. A woman like our deceased sister needs not live long in a community in order to gain a wide circle of friends The solidity of her principles inspired confidence; the purity of her character secured respect; the modesty of her bearing won hearts; her readiness to assist others in their hardships gamed gratitude. In honoring such a one, in speaking words of praise and love above her dust we pay a tribute to ourselves.

The death of Mrs. Gifford-Epsen watchful unselfish love that never forgets and never gives up its charge, fears no danger, dreads no hardships, never wearies nor slumbers while she has a mind to plan and hands to perform. She was so resolute, so devoted, so assured of her present duty, that life with its memories, its happiness and its responsibilities, inspired her to constant

Whoever had known her in life could but admire her self sacrificing attachment to all her relatives as also to her friends to whom she was not only friendly and attentive, but in many a serious juncture proved herself a generous assistant, spending time and labor for their relief and comfort.

ONE OF THE WORLD'S NOBLE WOMEN. It is not too much to say that to persons of these sterling qualities the world owes a debt of gratitude. They have laid the foundations of the earth. The world's experience attests to the truth that self-sacrifice, or living for others, is the noblest of all discipline. Ease and comforts, luxuries and the like, are not the promoters of nobility of heart, excellence of mind, purity of soul. These were not the cradles that rocked a world's experience attests to the truth were not the cradles that rocked a Bruno or a Socrates, an Epictetus or a Garfield into fame. Speak, history-who are the world's great men and women? Whom do we honor and love to honor? Not a Midas and Croesus, not a Sardanapalus and Cesare Borgia, not a Tamerlane and Napoleon! Who do we reverence and love and honor? A LIPE WORTH EMULATING. Dear friends, when our lips are closed forever, may those of others be opened to speak words of kindness, of friendship, of love for us, such as we hear not of our departed sister. When the sad news was announced that Mrs. Gifford-Epsen was dead, there was heard this spontaneous witness to her worth, Might we, too, too, learn to emulate her noble work. Success and reverses, life and death, are not in our keeping. But our mor life is. Whether tears glitter in our eyes, or smiles light up our face, whether ours be a wreath of glory or crown of thorns, this certainly we hold: We can be true to our better self; we can be kind to others, change their tears to sparkling diamonds of hope, their sighs into songs of gladness, their nights of disappointment into noon tides of triumph. We may pour oil on troubled waters, bid storms assailing others be still, and in the sunshine of love, melt above services. the icy bond around the deadened souls of our brothers, and kindle anew in then the flames of holy zeal. We know this and thus the number of our days is agsured.
